Priorities for the Work Public Health Nurse in Today’s Society

Nurses play an important role in public health. Some of the top priorities would include primary prevention including health promotions, and prevention strategies. Partnering with community representatives ensures that decisions on intervention strategies reflect values and are in the interest of the people. Creating a healthy social and economic environment, where people can thrive. Efficient allocation of resources to achieve maximum health benefits (Kub, Kulbok, Miner & Merill, 2017).

Balancing the Relationship between Advocacy and Case Management

To maintain a balanced relationship, case managers can employ the following strategies while navigating the complex healthcare system. Doing the right thing a strategy that focuses on providing proper care for clients as indicated by client's condition and preferred by client's support system. Promoting communication among team members both clients and healthcare providers and related support systems on care services and related issues. Case conferencing when dilemma or disagreements arise. Teaching to ensure clients and healthcare members are informed and knowledgeable in regulation (Tahan, 2016).
The case management process can be used. Case disposition/identification is achieved through a case management checklist. Assessment, information is obtained by case managers through home, employer, doctors, and physician visits; attorney interviews, and discussion with other care providers. Planning to return to work, identification through discussions with physicians, the injured person, family, and attorney. Identification of resources forms the implementation of the treatment plan. This involves identifying outside resources and negotiating contracts. Communication and coordination among the case managers with the injured person and the attorney is crucial. Evaluation, ensure continuous monitoring of services to ensure high standards are maintained and agreed budget (Powell & Tahan, 2018).
